One carcass, a hundred kitchens.

Every LINEA kitchen is built from the same short list of modules: base, wall and tall units on one carcass, in widths that step by 10 and 15 cm. That is what lets us plan a galley in an afternoon and an island kitchen in a week, and deliver both in six.

The fronts are handleless. A brushed-brass J-groove runs along the top of each door and drawer, so the run reads as one calm surface, broken only by the 3 mm shadow gaps between fronts.

Each module in this catalogue is drawn as a front elevation, to scale, beside its photograph, sizes and price. Choose the modules, choose a finish, and send us the list: our planners will return a drawing within five working days.

Three heights, one line.

Base, wall and tall units share one carcass depth, one plinth and one worktop line, so any module sits beside any other. Island units are finished on every side and stand free.

01 Measure the wall

Note each wall's length, the window and door openings, and where water, gas and power come in.

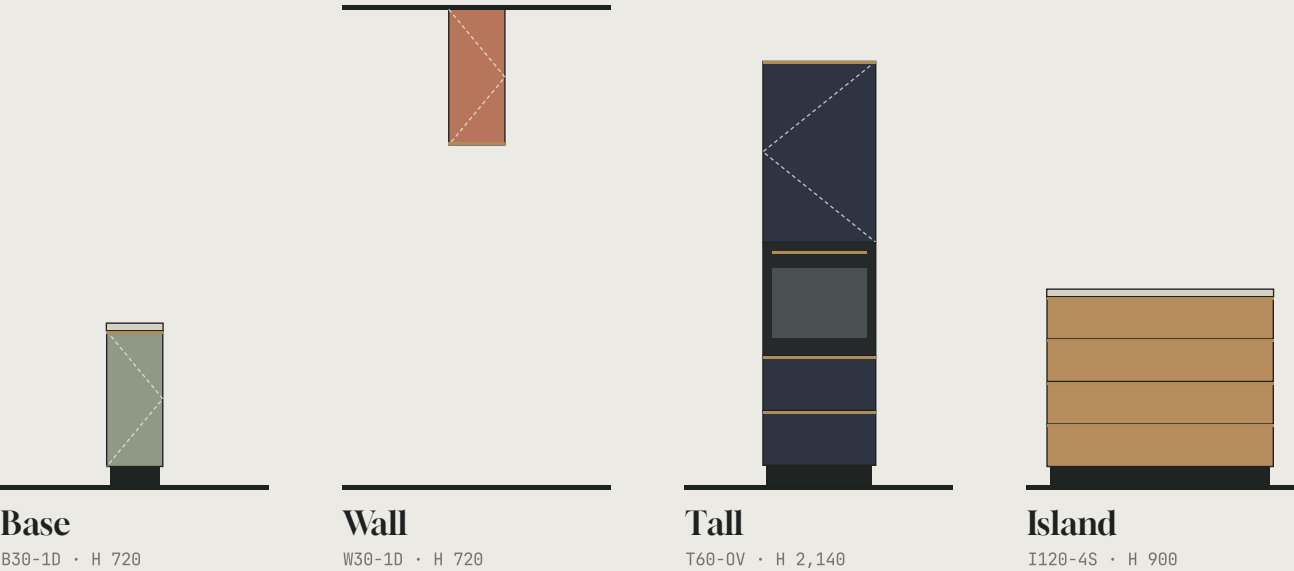

02 Fill it with modules

Start with the sink, hob and tall units, then fill the gaps from the width grid. Leftover space under 30 mm is closed with a filler.

03 Choose one finish

Every door and drawer front is made to order in the finish you choose. Mix two finishes between base and wall runs if you like.
